

AFP

AUSTRALIAN FEDERAL POLICE

Are you the future face of the AFP?

The AFP can take its employees to exciting places, provide diverse duties and the opportunity to work with interesting people. Entry level recruit opportunities are available now.

- Police Officers (ACT Police – Canberra); and
- Protective Service Officers (opportunities in regional and remote locations across Australia).

As a fit and healthy, high performing and motivated individual we have opportunities for you to begin your career with the AFP.

What does a Police Officer do?

Following completion of recruit training you will be the first point of contact for the public requiring police assistance and will be required to investigate breaches of the law, assess evidence and interview witnesses over the course of investigations. ACT Community Police have a genuine interest in servicing the community in roles such as general duties, community safety, criminal investigations, traffic operations and intelligence.

What does a Protective Service Officer do?

Protective Service Officers will deliver protective security and first response capability to protect Australia's interests. Following required recruit training you will be required to assess the appropriate law enforcement response for the situation, report and collate relevant data and maintain cooperative relationships with stakeholders and the public when protecting people, assets and critical infrastructure such as Parliament House and key Defence sites.

To be eligible to apply, you must:

- be an Australian citizen
- be 18 years of age or older
- hold a valid Australian driver's licence (automatic or manual)
- have a minimum Year 10 Certificate with Cert IV/Diploma level qualification or Trade Certificate. University level qualifications are also welcomed.

The AFP is committed to having a diverse workforce and gender balance and applications from Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders, people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds and females are strongly encouraged for these entry level recruit roles.
