Australian Press Council

In a period of significant change, the Australian Press Council must adapt to new challenges and opportunities. It is responsible for ensuring effective complaints-handling, developing and refining standards of reporting in newspapers, magazines and online media outlets and advocating freedom of speech, freedom of the press and responsible journalism.

Adapting to the changing media industry and regulatory landscape, upholding public expectations of high standards of practice, steadily expanding membership across all forms of mastheads and enhancing capabilities of the Council form key elements of the organisation's strategic plan.

The Council now seeks a new Chair who will provide strategic leadership in response to these challenges and who will build upon the significant achievements of the previous Chair, Professor David Weisbrot AM.
