

ABORIGINAL EMPLOYMENT PATHWAYS

Aboriginal prison officer vacancies

- Earn a fair salary or casual wage, plus generous penalty rates for overtime and weekend shifts
- Gain access to dedicated personal support from our Aboriginal Employment Team throughout your job application and your career with the department
- Become part of the department's 100+ strong, Aboriginal staff network.

The Department of Justice and Community Safety is now recruiting a new squad of full-time and casual prison officers to work at Marngoneet Correctional Centre or Barwon Prison in South West Victoria.

There are no formal qualifications required to apply to be a prison officer, and we're interested in people from all professional backgrounds. You will undergo an extensive paid, eight-week training program prior to service, so it's more important that you enjoy working with people and possess empathy, resilience and integrity.

To apply to become a prison officer today, go to correctionsjobs.vic.gov.au and click the 'Apply' tab to find the open roles. More locations in Victoria will open soon, and you can submit your expression of interest on this same page.

Don't delay, applications for Marngoneet close on 10 June, while Barwon applications close 13 June!
