

Aboriginal Client Service Officer (Housing Services) – Homes NSW

The Department of Communities and Justice (DCJ) is one of the largest providers of social housing in the world. We provide a range of housing solutions to meet the varied needs of today's communities. Our highest priorities are to target assistance to those with the greatest need and to work with other agencies to support individuals and communities.

The Client Service officer will drive improved outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people by providing comprehensive support to clients across tenancy, property management and housing options advice tailored to the client's needs and eligibility. As well as contribute to building stronger communities and neighbourhoods by supporting tenancy and community participation initiatives.

The role is responsible for maintaining, monitoring and collaborating with various internal and external stakeholders to ensure a positive client outcome and successful tenancies. The role will also entail monitoring of property condition and facilitating necessary maintenance and modification for client's needs.
