SENIOR PROJECT OFFICER

Our vision is for ANU to be a world leader in First Nations research and teaching, and for this work to drive growth in democratic participation, societal equity and economic opportunity for Indigenous Australians.

We need an experienced Senior Projects Officer to work collaboratively within our new First Nations Portfolio, under the leadership of our new Vice-President (First Nations), Yawuru man, Professor Peter Yu. We strongly encourage and support applications from Indigenous Australians for this role.

You will provide high-level project management support, and policy and advocacy advice in the achievement of the Portfolio's strategic goals. You will be able to anticipate, analyse and respond to changes and trends in the political, economic, social or legal landscapes relevant to the Portfolio's strategic interests.

Your role is part of the new First Nations Portfolio, reporting to the Executive Officer, and working closely with the new Vice President (First Nations) and the Portfolio's Executive team. You will collaborate with internal and external stakeholders, including consulting with relevant stakeholders and subject matter experts with respect to strategic analysis and project coordination.

We support continuous learning and professional development, and will provide mentoring and support to those candidates wanting to adapt their existing project management experience and analytic and organisational skills to the exciting world of higher education.
